

“It’s time to end the discriminatory use of test scores to determine Specialized High Schools admission. College admissions offices do not rely on standardized exams as the sole factor to select students. Many of the most competitive colleges don’t require applicants to submit test scores at all. New York City teenagers should have a similar opportunity to show that academic talent means more than filling in multiple-choice bubbles.”

FairTest Executive Director Monty Neill