When supporters include LDF in their estate plans, they become part of the LDF Family. We want to keep you informed of the work that matters most to you.

Please check all that apply from the following interests:

Economic Justice: Through litigation, advocacy, and public education, LDF’s economic justice practice continues the fight to increase fairness and equal opportunity for Black Americans in all aspects of the economy.

Criminal Justice: LDF’s criminal justice practice uses litigation, advocacy, and public education to eliminate racial bias in our criminal justice system.

Political Participation: LDF’s political participation group uses legal, legislative, public education, and advocacy strategies to promote the full, equal, and active participation of Black Americans in America’s democracy.

Education: As the organization that litigated Brown v. Board of Education, the landmark Supreme Court case that struck down segregation in public schools, LDF has long led the struggle for equal education in the United States. That struggle continues today, both in and outside the courts, where LDF works tirelessly to advance educational equity, and ensure that all students have access to a safe, inclusive, and high-quality education.

Thurgood Marshall Institute: The Thurgood Marshall Institute is a multidisciplinary center within LDF. Launched in 2015, the Institute complements LDF’s traditional litigation strengths and brings critical capabilities to the fight for racial justice, including research and targeted advocacy campaigns. The Institute also houses LDF’s Archives—a collection of materials chronicling the legal history of the Civil Rights Movement.

From time to time, LDF hosts events. Are you interested in attending events in any of the following metropolitan areas?:
