Voter Participation Center and Legal Defense Fund Mail Voter Registration Applications to Black Voters in South Carolina

As South Carolinians gear up for Election Day 2022, the non-profit Voter Participation Center (VPC) and the Legal Defense Fund (LDF) are teaming up to mail 161,490 voter registration applications to eligible Black South Carolina citizens this month — to build enthusiasm and raise awareness ahead of Election Day on Tuesday, November 8th.

“Democracy cannot be strong and secure without informed, engaged, and active citizens,” said LDF President and Director-Counsel Janai S. Nelson. “That’s why we’re proud to join with our partners at VPC to encourage Black South Carolinians to make sure that everyone in their home who is eligible is registered to vote at their current address.”

Tom Lopach, President and CEO of the Voter Participation Center: “VPC is proud to partner with LDF in South Carolina to help make voting as accessible as possible for South Carolinians. We share the important mission of removing barriers to the ballot box for those who have been historically underrepresented or disenfranchised in our democracy. VPC and LDF will keep working together to ensure that all South Carolinians can make their voices heard on Election Day and beyond.”

The letters state that “Registering to vote is simple!” and “all you have to do is fill it, sign it, mail it.”

VPC and LDF are directly mailing voters the official national voter registration form. By filling out the voter registration application, voters can ensure they have an opportunity to vote on or before Election Day on Tuesday, November 8th.

The voter registration applications are part of an ongoing effort by VPC and LDF to help register and turn out eligible voters in South Carolina. As Election Day nears, VPC and LDF also will be engaging South Carolinians through online programming.
